

Onions on my Sneakers? That is how my Dad taught me to say “Are you in peace?” My Dad lived in Korea for two years and still speaks the language and makes Korean food. My favorite Korean food is bulkogi. I would love to have the chance to eat more authentic, Korean food.

When our Dad is angry or extremely cheerful he will start talking Korean. It is very confusing and I have no clue if he is mad or happy. He wants to take our family on a trip to Korea. When we go I would like to stand out to the Koreans by knowing their language since many people don’t know Korean.

When we were studying about Asia my Dad came in to my school class dressed in his colorful, traditional hanbok. Even though I thought he looked funny since it was pink and red I still enjoyed hearing about Korea.

Whenever I look at our fireplace mantel I see Korean Wedding Ducks. These wooden ducks tell how the husband and wife are getting along. We also have Korean Native Dolls. I find both of these very interesting and would like to learn more about where they originally came from.
